5. Big Foot's Back! -Game's Over-

Saturday morning

the boys decided to play the prank again.

Rod dressed in the costume
and waited in the woods
for tourists.

He didn't have to wait long.

There were so many tourists around that day

that Rod must have scared
more than one-hundred people
by mid-afternoon.

One man was not scared at all.

His name was Constable Rich,
the top police officer
in the town
where the boys lived.

The moment Rod stopped
in the forest to meet Carl,
he saw Constable Rich
standing there
with his hand
on Carl's shoulder.

'The game's over,'

Rod thought.
'And we're
in a lot of trouble!'

Constable Rich's face
didn't look angry at all.
It looked happy
and expressed the fact that he was proud of himself
for catching the pranksters.
Nevertheless,
until he spoke,
both boys had been shaking in their boots.

But then a funny thing happened...

Constable Rich didn't take the boys to the police station that day.
He didn't bring the boys
back to their parents either.
He didn't even scold them.

Instead, with his low,
authoritative voice
he congratulated the boys.

'Well done, well done,' he said.
'The mayor hasn't been this happy

in years!

He told them.

Rod managed a weak, uncertain: 'Why?'

Constable Rich said,

'because this town

hasn't seen so many tourists

in at least twenty-five years!

Keep it up boys...

keep it up!

And then

to the relief of the boys

he walked away.

Rod and Carl

looked at each other

and both of them

had a look of confusion

on their faces.

They shook their heads.

Then they went home

and watched TV.
